

Large crowds and fine buildings do not necessarily make for healthy churches. There are too many of such churches that are physically and materially okay, but are sick, diseased and rotten up internally. The truth is that church growth and health must go together. Churches can start from growth and gradually move to health. But both must be held in constant tension in the church. * Church health will help you to see the true state of your church. * Church health will help you to discover the malaise troubling your church. * Church health will pinpoint areas that much work still need to be done. * Church health will pinpoint the way forward for your church. * Church health will stem crisis, losses and break away in your church. * Church health will empower you to do more and be much more. * Church health will help your church to become a rapturable church. It is not enough to have a church, we must do everything scripturally possible to make that church a healthy one. Every serious church leader must read, study, digest, dissect and discover those gems that will make his or her church a healthy one.
