

Excerpt from Theology Explained and Defended, in a Series of Sermons, Vol. 4 of 5 The command which is given us in this passage of Scripture, requires no explanation. I shall therefore proceed immediately to the consideration of the great subject which it presents to our view under the following heads; I. The perpetual establishment of the sabbath; and, II. The manner in which it is to be observed. I. I shall endeavour to prove the perpetual establishment of the sabbath in the Scriptures. This subject I propose to consider at length; and, in the course of my examination, shall attempt to offer direct proof of its perpetuity, and then to answer objections. In direct proof of the perpetuity of this institution I allege, I. The text. The text is one of the commands of the moral law. Now it is acknowledged, that the moral law is, in the most universal sense, binding on men of every age and every country.
